

STATE ETHICS COMMISSIONS -- ACCESS TO DETERMINATIONS

All of the states have some sort of state ethics oversight entity, although jurisdiction of these entities varies. Nine states (Arizona, Idaho, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Vermont, Virginia, and Wyoming) do not have state independent ethics commissions, thus external oversight is provided through other state agencies such as the Office of the Secretary of State or Attorney General, or by legislative ethics committees. Commissions in Alaska and Maine have the power to investigate ethics matters that relate to legislators, but matters are adjudicated by the ethics committee. Illinois, Kentucky, and Washington have an independent legislative ethics commission and an independent executive commission with jurisdiction over their respective branches.

This table includes access to state ethics commission "determinations," which include: opinions, decisions, advice letters, final orders, enforcement actions or rulings, and reports. The availability, accessibility, and type of a determination varies from state to state. In most states, a person needs to know a name, date, or document/case number in order to access a determination. However in some states, determinations are readily accessible through search capabilities, subject indices, or brief summaries. (See for example, Georgia, Hawaii, Kentucky, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Texas.)
